Celebrating 10 Years of Excellence

HOSPITALITY: A VERY REWARDING INDUSTRY

CHEESE FESTIVAL: it was 'grate'!

The SA Cheese Festival is well-loved as the biggest and most popular outdoor culinary event in Southern Africa. With some 30 000 cheese lovers passing through its gates every year, it poses the ideal opportunity to connect with foodies.

Following on last year's successful appearance in the food theatre, TPHS was invited to present creative food demonstrations using alternative ingredients such as Carmien Tea, Passionate Pomegranates and Karoo Struthio deli meats in the new Cape Made Kitchen, an initiative of the Western Cape Department of Agriculture.

During the first demo on Saturday 28 April, Minister Alan Wende ceremoniously grated the cheese on the fritatta that was prepared by chef Aviv Liebenberg.

Renowned chef receives TPHS's mentorship award

Who better than a member of the South African team partaking in the Culinary Olympics in Germany later this year to help shape the career of culinary students?

Henrico Grobbelaar, Executive Chef of the Cullinan Hotel Tsogo Sun in Cape Town, was recently the recipient of TPHS's coveted Mentorship Award. Grobbelaar, who has won numerous prestigious international and local awards, says this particular award takes up a proud place in his office. "This means that I made a difference to the life and career of a future chef," he says. >>>Read more ...

Responsible Tourism

Baklava in Greece, injera in Ethiopia and bunny chows in Durban – there's nothing like sampling a place's food to create lasting memories of one's travels. But increasingly travellers want to be reassured that their travels do not "cost the earth".

"The importance of resource conservation and sustainable practices can never be ignored and should be imbedded in the curriculum of every qualification," says Susina Jooste who recently addressed delegates at the Better Tourism Africa / The Longtable Project focusing on different institutions' role towards responsible tourism.

Students participate on global platform

The American Hospitality Academy, to whom The Private Hotel School is accredited, weekly honours students from their affiliates as so-called 'a ha stars'. These students are selected based on activities (e.g. participation in AHA's World Campus discussions) that reflect their Amazing Hospitality Attitude and a Spirit of Service. Three of our students, Alison Ellerbeck, Johnnie Tapuch and Katelyn Taylor, were recently honoured in one week.
